Workshop Description

This workshop is an introduction to the Developmental, Individual Difference, Relation-Based (D.I.R.) model, developed by Stanley Greenspan, M.D. and Serena Wieder, Ph.D. for working with children with developmental delays including Autistic Spectrum Disorders. Participants will learn about the model including the developmental levels that a child must master including Shared Attention, Engagement, Two-way Purposeful Communication, Two-way Problem Solving, Emotional Ideas and Abstract Thinking. They will also learn about DIR™ as a strategic, goal-oriented, affect-filled way of interacting that encompasses assessment, goal creation, and other tools to help a child initiate and respond at higher developmental levels.

Credits

Applied for through NASW-GA.

Participants

This workshop is appropriate for professionals including Psychologists, Counselors, Occupational, Speech/Language, Physical, Recreational Therapists, and Educators.

Course Objectives

Workshop Participants will:

- Understand the basics of the DIR model.
- Learn techniques to engage hard to reach children.
- Explore different child-focused activities in several categories: structured, semi-structured, and child-directed and how they can be integrated into various settings.
- Understand the importance of collaboration with the child's family in all aspects of intervention
- Become aware of the importance of self-reflection and self-awareness
